Program aims

The Master of Public Relations degree aims to prepare students to:

- demonstrate an informed and rational understanding of salient contemporary issues in corporate communication
- pursue a scholarly and informed study, to a publishable standard, of the relevance of corporate communication to aspects of organisational communication including strategic planning, risk management and management behaviour
- employ public relations communication theory to design and implement field research in a range of contemporary issues and problems in all aspects of corporate communication
- select and apply appropriate and professionally sound communication principles into the design and practice of corporate communication
- provide best practices in planning and organisation to corporate public relations.

Program objectives

On successful completion of the Master of Public Relations degree students should be able to:

- display an informed awareness of the central role of the agencies, technical discourses and production processes of corporate communication in societal and political contexts
- apply communication and public relations theory to publishable analyses of organisational communication practices
- make appropriate and ethically justified applications of research methodology to the study and investigation of public relations practices
- initiate, plan and execute campaign and program tasks to a high professional level in a selected area of organisational communication.
